Boris Vilic, Dean, College of Continuing Studies, Rider University
Rider University's Return to Learn program, sponsored by the NJ Commission on Higher Education, identifies nontraditional students who have completed more than 60 credits but have not earned a degree. This presentation will focus on lessons learned, including factors that led students to discontinue their studies, outreach efforts to re-engage them, and strategies that can enable students to return to college and complete their degrees.
- 11:15-noon         Rethinking an institution's Newcombe Scholarships program
Marie Lilly, Associate Director for Women's Resources, Center for Student Diversity, Towson University
Marie Lilly joined Towson University earlier this year after years of administering a variety of social service programs. During a July campus visit, we enjoyed her description of how she has brought her prior experience to bear upon refocusing Towson's Newcombe Scholarships program toward achieving its stated goals. We thought her presentation would also interest many of you, and would provide useful ideas for reflection and discussion.

Large group and small group discussions of current issues in serving students, Newcombe program administration, fundraising, the reporting process, the Newcombe website, and other topics of interest to attendees
